Dorm Conditions
Dorm Dilemma

Problem
The current dorm conditions at ASU are clearly not a priority. The dorms directly contribute to poor physical and mental health of students. There is mold inside the rooms and a lack of fresh air which is proven to cause congestion, sickness, anxiety, depression, and more. This comes with a large amount of complaints from residents to housing and maintenance, and overall just poor quality of life within dorm living at Arizona State University.

Solution
ASU students and maintenance staff must create a healthy environment in which dorm conditions can be adjusted to livable conditions. To fix the current conditions, we must hire electricians, plumbers, install HVAC systems, and use mold tests. This would occur on a specific maintenance day, three days after finals week, this allows students to prepare a checklist for what services their dorms need as opposed to having a request system.
